INTRODUCTION

This issue of the Population Education Accessions List is an output from our computerized bibliographic data base using the Micro CDS/ISIS system. The Accessions List is being generated three times a year in three formats: printed format, diskette format, and via e-mail. In addition, it can be viewed on our web site: <http://www.education.unesco.org/proap/new/rechpec/home.htm>

The list categorizes the entries into three parts:

Part I - Population Education consists of titles dealing with various aspects of population education arranged by country in the first section and general materials in the second section.

Part II - Knowledge Base Information consists of titles that deal with the different multidisciplinary aspects of population education. These entries are grouped into sections of the following major multidisciplinary topics:

1. Documentation
2. Environment and environmental education
3. Fertility and family planning
4. Reproductive health
5. Adolescent reproductive and sexual health
6. Health, nutrition (including morbidity and mortality, maternal and child health)
7. HIV/AIDS
8. Information and communication
9. Migration, urbanization and human settlement
10. Population and sustainable development
11. Demography
12. Gender equality, equity and empowerment of women
13. Research and evaluation

Part III - Audio-visual materials consist of titles of various kinds of audio-visual aids (films, slides, charts, kits, videotapes, etc.) dealing with both knowledge base and population education aspects.

Part IV - Appendices consist of List of Publishers and Sources, Subject Index, Author Index, and Geographical Index.

Each entry or title is given a running number and bibliographical references that include: (i) either the author or corporate author; (ii) title; (iii) imprint; (iv) collation; (v) subject key words; (vi) country key words; and (vii) classification number. In addition to these, a source code is also given. The source code is an abbreviation of the name of the organization where a particular title can be acquired. For the complete names and addresses of the source codes, kindly consult the List of Publishers and Sources given in the Appendices.

Brown, Lester R., and others.

State of the world 1998: a Worldwatch Institute report on progress toward a sustainable society. 15th ed. New York, W.W. Norton, 1998. 251 p.

In this fifteenth edition, the authors look at the environmental effects of continuing economic growth as the economy outgrows the earth's ecosystem. The book describes the consequences of the collision between the expanding economy and the earth's natural limits: shrinking forests, falling water tables, eroding soils, collapsing fisheries, rising temperatures, and disappearing species.

Long-term implications of low fertility in Kerala, India. Asia-Pacific Population
Journal. 13(3): 41-66, September 1998.

The State of Kerala is about two decades ahead of India as a whole in achieving the replacement level of fertility. Currently the total fertility rate is about 1.7 children per woman compared with 3.0 for India. Because of the remarkable progress made by Kerala in its demographic transition, its demographic trends in the first half of the twenty-first century will be dramatically different from those of the second half of the twentieth century. This article provides a basis for policy makers to use in preparing for those changes, which include population ageing in the face of inadequate social security systems, impacts on young people, education and employment, and migration.

Revising the proximate determinants of fertility framework: What have we learned in the past 20 years?. Studies in Family Planning. 29(3): 255-267, September 1998.

The proximate determinants of fertility framework, developed in its current form by Bongaarts, has been used extensively by researchers for the past 20 years. Since the initial framework was developed, a wealth of new survey data on the proximate determinants has become available. This article reviews the new data and past experiences and suggests modifications to the framework that would take advantage of this experience. The major modifications suggested are 1) the use of sexual activity rather than marriage to indicate exposure to pregnancy; 2) a revision of the sterility index to measure infecundity from all causes; 3) a revised index of contraception that accounts for the fact that users of sterilization may become infecund before age 49; and 4) a revised definition and estimate of total fecundity.

This manual was prepared to help health personnel who need to educate and counsel adolescents. It provides important information on specific and common adolescent health situations. It is divided into 3 modules and each of the module has units that deal with specific issue. Module 1 deals with giving information on fundamental physical, biological and psychological changes in adolescents and problems related to reproductive and sexuality in adolescents. Module 2 deals with giving information on specific health topics peculiar to adolescents. Module 3 deals with how to provide counselling services. It gives pointers and suggests steps that are simple and practical. Each module presented tries to highlight the desired or positive health action or counselling point that are needed to achieve it.

Coming of age: from facts to action for adolescent sexual and reproductive health.
Geneva, WHO, 1997. 179 p. (WHO/FRH/ADH/97.18)

This guide has been developed to enable programme planners and managers to carry out a rapid situation analysis of adolescent sexual and reproductive health so that programmes may be designed or improved on the basis of sound, up-to-date information. It provides guidance on the actions that should be undertaken in three phases over 5-6 month period: planning the situation analysis, doing it, and using its findings. Various methods and procedures are proposed which may be freely adapted and flexibly implemented according to the needs and resources of each setting. The guide focuses on the sexual and reproductive health of adolescents in recognition of the fact that the initiation of sexual activity is an almost universal feature of this second decade of life and becoming an adult sexually is so central to their overall health.

Private health sector growth in Asia: issues and implications. New York, John Wiley & Sons, 1997. 254 p.

This book is based upon the papers commissioned by the Asian Development Bank for the Second Regional Conference on Health Sector Reform held in Manila in March 1996. The book focuses on private sector growth in the health sector and collaboration between the public and private sectors in achieving national health objectives in Asia. It examines policy responses to the expanding private sector provision of health services in six countries: India, Indonesia, Republic of Korea, Philippines, Thailand, and Viet Nam. These issues are reviewed in four sections dealing with (1) an overview of policy issues in private sector provision of health care; (2) demand side factors and financing options; (3) supply side factors and payment mechanisms; and (4) quality of care. The book concludes with a summary of these issues and discussion of future health sector reform in the region. The papers in this volume reflect comments gleaned from policy makers, health service providers and researchers from the twenty countries represented at the conference.

Rahman, Mizanur.

The effect of child mortality on fertility regulation in rural Bangladesh. Studies in Family Planning. 29(3): 268-281, September 1998.

This study analyzes longitudinal data from Matlab, Bangladesh, to examine the impact of child mortality on subsequent contraceptive acceptance and continuation. The strong negative impact is found to attenuate with family size, indicating a "replacement effect." An "insurance effect" is observed as contraceptive acceptance and continuation were negatively associated with the number of previous deaths of children. Couples seem to find contraceptive use acceptable if the child who dies is one of a large family. Potentially, contraceptive use could be acceptable for spacing after a child in a small family dies. Family planning programmes can help to reduce fertility and maternal and child health risks substantially by supplying appropriate methods to those couples who have experienced a young child's death; to be most effective, methods should be supplied immediately after the child's death.

Too young to die: genes or gender?. New York, United Nations, 1998. 260 p.
(ST/ESA/SER.A/155)

This study consists of 10 chapters that explore a broad range of mechanisms, ranging from the biological to the social and economic, that influence sex differentials in childhood mortality. The mechanisms considered affect mortality differentials either directly, as in the case of the nutritional status of boys and girls or the differential use of health care by sex of child, or indirectly, as in the case of maternal education and decisions regarding the intra-household allocation of resources. The study also provides a historical account of the evolution of the sex differentials in childhood mortality in today's developed countries during the nineteenth and early twentieth centuries. Another major contribution is its measurement and analysis of the levels and trends of infant, child and under-five mortality for boys and girls during the 1970s and 1980s. Such analysis allows the identification of the countries and regions in which girls have a survival disadvantage compared to boys, and permits an objective assessment of the magnitude and extent of excess female mortality in childhood.

Evaluating Information-Education-Communication (IEC) programs for family planning and reproductive health: final report of the IEC Working Group. Chapel Hill, NC, Carolina Population Center, 1996. 161 p. (WG-IEC-03)

This report has been prepared as an update to the IEC section of the Handbook of Indicators for Family Planning Program Evaluation. It is based on discussions and input from a variety of IEC experts from diverse organizations (described in Appendix A of this report). It is intended as a vehicle for developing a greater degree of consensus regarding the most appropriate indicators and methods to use in evaluating the IEC component of family planning programmes. The report divided into eight chapters: Chapter 1. Overview of this report; Chapter 2. Systematic evaluation of IEC programmes; Chapter 3. Evaluating counselling; Chapter 4. Evaluating group presentations; Chapter 5. Evaluating community mobilization; Chapter 6. Evaluating mass media campaigns; Chapter 7. Evaluating communication directed to influentials; Chapter 8. Scientific methods for measuring the impact of IEC programmes.

Television accelerates family planning messages. PEN: Population Education News. 26(1-2): 7-9, 1998.

This articles attempts to study as to how far the family planning programmes and advertisements on television provide knowledge to the viewers. In conclusion, the majority of the respondents have expressed their opinion that they have been benefitted by the family planning programmes and advertisements on television. However, the gaining of knowledge about family planning from the television programmes and advertisements has been found to be associated with the sex of the respondents. The female respondents have gained more knowledge about family planning, family welfare than the male respondents.

The impact of a family planning multimedia campaign in Bamako, Mali. Studies in Family Planning. 29(3): 309-323, September 1998.

An integrated multimedia campaign featuring family planning messages saturated the 900,000 person city of Bamako, Mali, for three months during the spring of 1993. With traditional theater and music, family planning messages were repeatedly broadcast on radio and television that conveyed information about modern contraceptive methods, the need for male sexual responsibility, the health and economic advantages of family planning, the need for communication between spouses, and that Islam, the predominant faith of Mali, does not oppose family planning. A separate sample pretest-post-test quasi-experimental research design was used to evaluate the effects of the campaign and exposure to specific messages on changes in contraceptive knowledge, attitudes, and practice.

Saad, Paulo Murad.

Recent migration in the State of Parana. Curitiba, Brazil, Paranacidade, 1998. 29 p.
(Paranacidade technical series; no. 4)

After a period of intense population growth, the State of Parana experienced huge population losses during the 1970s. Recent studies refer to a timid reduction in the losses during the 1980s, but little was known until now about the migration movements in the State during the 1990s. The present study substantiates the declining trend of population losses found in previous studies, by showing an incontestable reduction of the State's migration balance deficit during the first half of the 1990s. Moreover, the analysis indicates the attenuation of previously important migration flows, and suggests the emergence of a new migration profile in the State in which the eminently young migrant with no professional qualification, typically from the rural zone, is gradually replaced by a more mature and qualified urban migrant.

Linkages between population and education: a technical support services report.

New York, Population Division, Department of Economic and Social Affairs, United Nations, 1997. 42 p. (POP-TSS-97-6)

This paper clarifies the impact of education on population variables. The review gives particular attention to the linkages between education and fertility, although its relationships with mortality and migration are also mentioned. Among the socio-economic factors that affect the three demographic processes, education is a key determinant, although its impact is enhanced or reduced according to the social and cultural conditions of every countries. Educated individuals are better equipped to safeguard the survival of mothers and their children; they are also in a better position to take appropriate decisions concerning their migratory options. The links fertility are analyzed through the impact on fertility preferences, as well as on nuptiality, breastfeeding and use of contraception. The review of the literature indicates that education is the most solid and consistent variable to increase the demand for family planning services. The review is accompanied by an appendix that contains relevant provisions of the ICPD Programme of Action.

Lifelong preparation for old age in Asia and the Pacific. New York, United Nations, 1996. 155 p. (ST/ESCAP/1684)

This publication contains three parts. Part One presents a policy framework which covers the critical aspects of lifelong preparation for old age (income security, health maintenance, education). It also presents the report and annexed recommendations of a meeting of senior officials convened by ESCAP in May 1996 to discuss and finalize the aforementioned policy framework on lifelong preparation for old age. Part Two presents a regional overview of lifelong preparation for old age in Asia and the Pacific and highlights the major emerging issues that need to be taken into consideration in policy formulation. Part Three provides illustrative country situations, built on the findings of five country studies (India, the People's Republic of China, Singapore, Thailand, Republic of Korea).

Do population policies matter?: fertility and politics in Egypt, India, Kenya, and Mexico. New York, Population Council, 1998. 203 p.

This book looks at the history and evolution of policy commitment underpinning four governments' population efforts over the past half-century. What are the essential elements of political commitment that will sustain a successful population programme? Can the core features be teased out in a cross-cultural comparison? How should these features be assessed? Have foreign influences - primarily from the United States - really been motivating and sustaining factors? Does the gap between elite and public perceptions of population issues affect policy? These are some of the questions that this book explores.

Cause of death and active life expectancy in older population of the United States, by Mark D. Hayward, Eileen M. Crimmins and Yasuhiko Saito. Tokyo, 1998. 192-213 p. (NUPRI reprint series; no. 70)

Reprinted from "Journal of Aging and Health," Vol. 10, No. 2, May 1998, pp. 192-213.

This study investigates how the major causes of death end active and inactive life among older Americans. Based on data from the Longitudinal Study of Aging, a multistate life-table model of individuals' age-graded mortality and disability experiences reveals that many, and sometimes most, of the deaths occurring among the elderly population happen when people are active relatively close to death. This pattern is especially evident for men. Despite differences between active and inactive elders of a given age in the length of inactive life, few differences occur in the causes of death. Simulations show that many of the gains in life expectancy via the reduction in major diseases are felt in terms of increased active life, especially among the young-old and men. These results point to possible mechanisms in which improvements in mortality extend active life.

The long-range population projections presented in this report cover the period from 1950 to 2150. A total of seven projections for each of the eight major areas of the world are considered. The variants are distinguished by their assumptions regarding future scenarios in total fertility rates. The range of potential demographic outcomes underscores the difficulty of focusing on any particular scenario and also highlights the critical importance of current policies and actions for the long-range of the world population.

Empowering women through wage employment: the impact on gender relations in Bangladesh. Washington, D.C., International Center for Research on Women, 1996. 6 p. (ICRW report in brief)

This study explores the effects of wage employment and access to credit on gender relations. Of particular interest is how women's economic contributions may affect their status within the household, and how women perceive the costs and benefits of wage employment. In addition, it examines the effect of wage employment on the allocation and timing of household tasks and responsibilities such as children and food preparation.

Handbook for producing national statistical reports on women and men. New York, United Nations, 1997. 315 p. (ST/ESA/STAT/SER.K/14)(Social statistics and indicators, series K, no. 14)

The present handbook provides a framework for developing and disseminating, in the form of publication, a minimum set of statistics and indicators on women's and men's position in society. The first chapter describes the institutional arrangements and resource requirements for the development of a gender statistics publication as a project that could be either independent or an integral part of a well-established publication programme. The second and third chapters explain how to prepare and use available data and generate indicators on the basis of critical gender issues and concerns identified through user-producer consultations. The fourth provides details on tools for presenting statistics and indicators and on how they are combined to produce a user-oriented publication. The fifth chapter reviews steps in printing a publication and different ways of disseminating it. Other types of statistical outputs, such as wall charts and booklets, are also described.
